1. Write a simple chat application based on client/server socket programing in C. The assignment consists of implementation of a chat-client. Your program should connect to a other client at a given port. Once the connection is established, you should be able to send a message to the other client and receive the reply (your client should listen to the incoming requests on port number 3542). On exit, your program should close the socket and terminate.